To Whom It May Concern,

I am writing this letter in support of Ms. Megan Pillow Davis, who was once my WRD 110 instructor. I was in Ms. Davis's WRD 110 class in Fall 2014. It is a pleasure to write a few words about such a wonderful person.

As an international student from an Asian country, the transition to U.S. education was dramatic. Having had no idea what education is like in the United States, I was a bit nervous initially. As I registered for the first semester, I was informed by my adviser that I had to take this class which was basically an English class from Asian perspective. But rather than making it a typical English class, Ms. Davis made it a very enjoyable educational ride. This made WRD 110 my favorite class in my first semester and one of my favorite classes I have taken at College. The project assigned by Ms. Davis for the class was to make a short documentary video about "difference." This documentary project was rather fun and taught the whole class a lot of things. As a student, I learned a lot and developed a lot of skills. We had a few speeches, writing projects and research projects which are significantly important for a university student. Furthermore, I lost my stage fear and developed my public speaking skills and communication skills a lot. I believe Ms. Davis's teaching tactics and strategies were significant for this change in me.

Ms. Davis was a passionate instructor. Her determination and commitment towards students was very clear. During our semester she was pregnant, and she still did not cancel a single class, which I really admired. Throughout the semester for every project we were assigned, she was really clear about what she expected. Outside the class she was very helpful and flexible with her hours to meet students and help them. Also she was really pleasant and amicable in her approach to students. Ms. Davis is one of the best instructors I have had the opportunity to study with. I highly recommend her. Thank you!

Yours Truly,
